Now we have a folder with all the sites we want to fetch from. Now from a user(apache user) i want to run a curl query for a specific url only on that test_user site. Can we do it using some type of batch process? The first part is to automate the web browser and add the curl command, the other part is to automate the script which executes the query. A: Yes, you can use wget in a script. You can easily pass a file name to wget, so that it only downloads a specific page. wget -x The -x option will tell wget to resume a previous download. It will prompt you for a user and password for the remote site. You can automate the password prompt and authentication using expect. Code: http_proxy="" wget -x -r -k -p -E Q: Ant setting up Java 7 app for Android I'm trying to setup my Java 7 application for Android so that I can run it on the phone. I know this is a very basic question but it's not giving me the answer I need. I've converted the application to be able to run on Android by following this tutorial: First of all I compile it so that I get a jar file. Then I use this jar file to set up f678ea9f9e
